

Invertebrates: Segmented Worms

Earthworms are the most famous example of segmented worms. Another name for these creatures is Annelids, which means "little rings." Their bodies are made up of small sections or segments, but they have internal organs and a long digestive tract. Some are microscopic.

